Journal of Ancient Egyptian Interconnections

About This Journal

The Journal of Ancient Egyptian Interconnections (JAEI) is an online scholarly publication integrating Egyptian archaeology with Mediterranean, Near Eastern, and African studies—providing a dedicated venue for this growing field of interdisciplinary and inter-area research. The journal has a wide geographical and temporal range while continuing to specialize in all aspects of interaction between ancient Egypt and its neighbors. This extends to environmental, reception, and other types of studies, including the application of new methodologies, the history of Egyptology, the development and curation of Egyptian collections, "Egyptomania," and broadly related topics.

JAEI publishes full-length articles, short research notes, and reviews of published works, each of which has been peer-reviewed in a double-blind screening process by at least one Egyptologist and a specialist from the area or field of interaction, as well as reports and announcements of relevant conferences and symposia.

The editors are assisted by an international editorial board composed of distinguished experts in the cultures of ancient Egypt's neighbors or aspects of their interaction with Egypt. In this way, JAEI is well equipped to provide a solid publication platform for an area of study with true focus yet wide application within Egyptology and general historical studies.

The Journal of Ancient Egyptian Interconnections is published four times a year, with occasional additional volumes.

Subscription instructions and contributor guidelines are available elsewhere in this volume and at egyptianexpedition.org/announcements/.

Editorial and subscription questions should be sent to the journal staff at jaei@egyptianexpedition.org.